

HAC
172-1

14856-
158571-

THE COLONIAL MIND

1620-1800

BY
VERNON LOUIS PARRINGTON

Foreword by David W. Levy

BCU Cluj-Napoca

SAMER 1997 00873

University of Oklahoma Press : Norman and London

CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION: The theme stated; part played by European intellectual movements; influence in colonial America of old-world liberalisms—English Independency, French romantic theory; incoming of a diverse philosophy—English laissez faire ; significance of theology and politics in colonial America	xvii

BOOK I: LIBERALISM AND PURITANISM

New England a product of old-world custom and institutions, modified by new-world environment. Emergence of two classes: yeomanry, gentry; and two ideals: Puritan and Yankee	3
---	---

PART I

The Puritan Heritage—1620-1660

I. ENGLISH BACKGROUNDS
I. Carolinian liberalism an attempt to create a new social system to replace the feudal, resulting in the doctrine of natural rights, democracy, and equalitarianism. The result of changing economics. Puritanism primarily middle-class. Types of church polity—monarchical, aristocratic, democratic. Separatism the left wing of Puritanism	5
II. Diverse theologies of Luther and Calvin. Reactionary nature of Calvinism: established in absolutism—universality of moral law, determinism, reprobation—denial of natural rights.	II
II. THE TRANSPLANTING OF IDEAS
I. The settlement of New England came in the middle period of the Puritan movement. Pilgrim and Puritan.	16
II. The Puritan Presbyterian: Social station—aristocratic, yet with middle-class ambitions. Hostility to ideal of Separatism. Sanctions of the oligarchy, of the theocracy. A Utopian venture	17
III. Certain Mistakes: The Plymouth covenant-principle—stages in the nullification of the Separatist principle: the fellowship of the churches; statutes erecting a state church; the climax reached in the Cambridge Platform. The adoption of a freehold tenure of land. Webster's interpretation	22

	PAGE
III. THE CHIEF STEWARDS OF THEOCRACY
I. Master John Cotton—Priest: Representative of priestly stewardship. Scholar and intellectual. Doctrine of an ethica laristocracy and carnal liberty. A scripturist, seeking to check the drift towards democracy. His Model of Moses his Judicials . Rejection of natural rights, of hereditary aristocracy. The Way of the Congregational Churches Cleared . Debate with Roger Williams—freedom to follow the law of God	27
II. John Winthrop—Magistrate: Lay representative of theocracy. A cultivated gentleman. Reasons for removal. Influence of the Bible. His leadership; conception of magistracy ennobled by Puritanism. Implied absolutism—political philosophy. Struggle with the deputies; distrust of democracy. Absolute authority of law—the Little Speech. Liberty to the good, just, and honest. Consequences	38
IV. THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF INDEPENDENCY
I. The clash between Presbyterianism and Independency—the right of individual freedom. Liberal leaders—Hooker, Williams. Two commonwealths—Connecticut, Rhode Island	51
II. Thomas Hooker—Puritan Liberal: A moderate. Sprung from low social origins. As a preacher in England; removal to Hartford. Democratic order of the commonwealth due to Hooker. His Survey of the Summe of Church Discipline	53
III. Roger Williams—Seeker: Embodiment of radical Independency, and forerunner of later generations. A provocative figure. Stages in his intellectual development. A mystic and Christian democrat, concerned with a new social order. His political theory: the compact theory and theocratic absolutism; conception of the state—of government; the compact a constitution, government an agent, and the end the common well-being. Theory of toleration. A great political thinker. The constitution of Rhode Island	62
V. OTHER DREAMERS IN ISRAEL
I. Nathaniel Ward—Elizabethan Puritan: A Puritan wit and belated Euphuist. The Simple Cobler of Aggawamm —a mingling of satire and politics. A constitutionalist, pleading for a written compact to delimit prerogative and popular rights. His body of law	76
II. John Eliot—A Theocratic Utopia: The Christian Commonwealth . Ordered to be suppressed. His plan of a Christian state. A rigid social order	81

CONTENTS

XXV

PART II

	PAGE
The Twilight of the Oligarchy—1660-1720
The spread of provincialism and the consequences. Formalism in the church; superstition. The psychology of the Salem outbreak. The muddling of the oligarchy and the end	85
I. SAMUEL SEWALL—YANKEE—First representative of the new order. The Sewall of tradition; the real Sewall: middle-class, governed by a prudential morality. Uncreative, conservative, conventional. The other side—generous, kindly, the first embodiment of village friendliness	88
II. THE MATHER DYNASTY
I. Difficulties involved in attempting an estimate. Certain Harvard contributions	98
II. Increase Mather: An arch conservative, bred by a conservative environment. His sympathy for the Genevan system; attempts to strengthen discipline; steps in his Presbyterianizing. Intolerant—his biographer quoted. Unread in political theory—dictatorial. As agent at the English court. His bitterness. Not a great Puritan—compared with Samuel Hopkins. His Illustrious Providences —not scientific. The last of the New England Presbyterians	99
III. Cotton Mather: Victim of a provincial environment. Subject for a psychologist. His egoism; his quarrels. The Diary . His venture into politics. A natural Tory. His writings: Wonders of the Invisible World ; the Magnalia . The futility of his dream	106
III. STIRRINGS OF LIBERALISM
I. John Wise—Village Democrat: Before Dudley; at Quebec. Character—a liberal. His Vindication of the New England Churches —based on the doctrine of natural rights. Defense of democratic Congregationalism against the movement to Presbyterianize. Comment of Cotton Mather. His contribution to the paper-money controversy. His later influence	118
II. Social Drifts: Economic forces—a chasm opening between old England and New England. The village and Toryism: Joseph Dudley and the carters. First newspapers: News-Letter ; New-England Courant ; New-England Weekly Journal	125

BOOK II: THE COLONIAL MIND

PAGE

The middle eighteenth century undistinguished, yet it created the individualism that was the source of a new democratic psychology	131
--	-----

PART I

The Mind in the Making—1720-1763

I. COLONIAL BACKGROUNDS
I. New Stock: Economic motive of immigration. The Scotch-Irish influx; indentured servants—the Germans; diary of John Harrower	133
II. The Frontier—Lubberland: Journal of Madam Knight —frontier leveling, poverty. History of the Dividing Line , Col. William Byrd—the backcounty, lubberland, impatient of law	137
III. The Frontier—Land of Promise: Letters of Crèvecoeur : A French Physiocrat; his travels in America; first interpretation of the influence of the frontier in economic terms— Ubi panis ibi patria ; a new type; influence of the middle settlements, the frontier. More Letters : Crèvecoeur the Loyalist—dislike of American Whiggery.	140
II. THE ANACHRONISM OF JONATHAN EDWARDS
I. Backgrounds: Decay of Calvinism; beginnings of rationalism. A free environment and the dogmas of total depravity and election. The major question of determinism	148
II. Edwards a Puritan mystic. Sought to establish theology in philosophy. Idealistic philosophy. Desire to magnify God—interpreted in terms of will. Defended threatened dogmas. On the Freedom of the Will —the triumph of the theologian. Narrative of the Surprising Works of God and the psychology of conversion. The Great Awakening. Father of later Congregationalism. The tragedy of his position	152
III. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN—OUR FIRST AMBASSADOR—A Democrat in an aristocratic world. A free soul; product of environment. Compared with Defoe. His rise. Enters politics. Agent in England. Corruption of English politics. A sociologist; our first economist. Economic theories: A Modest Inquiry into the Nature and Necessity of a Paper Currency . Labor the measure of value. Accepted Physiocratic views: laissez faire , agrarianism. Distrust of industrialism. Principles of Trade . Political views: imperial federation, Whiggery. In the Constitutional Convention—a unicameral system. A child of the eighteenth century	164

PART II

The Awakening of the American Mind—1763-1783

I.	IMPERIAL SOVEREIGNTY AND HOME RULE	PAGE
I.	Background Facts: Causes of the Revolution obscure. Home rule and imperial centralization. Native liberalism. Three areas and three diverse interests. The imperial problem. Grievances of merchants, planters, yeomanry	179
II.	Argument and Propaganda: American case based on the British Constitution; on natural rights. Theories of representation, English and colonial. Powers of Parliament. Natural rights and Locke—reasons for his appeal	186
III.	Certain Social Consequences: Emergence of republicanism. Attitude of upper class. Expulsion of Loyalists. Influence on American culture. Rise of middle class; political centralization	190
II.	THE MIND OF THE AMERICAN TORY
I.	Thomas Hutchinson—Royal Governor: The House of Hutchinson. Character and intellectual attainments. Insincerity of the Tory philosophy. Situation on his accession to the governorship. Prerogative and democracy. Proposals for remodeling Massachusetts government. The Town Meeting. Affair of the letters. The problem of sovereignty. Government by ministerial instructions. Comment on his enemies. His failure	194
II.	Daniel Leonard—Tory Lawyer: Character. Massachusettsensis . A follower of Hobbes—the leviathan state. The sin of rebellion and the law of treason. Groundlessness of American sedition—the virus of republicanism. On the right of revolution	207
III.	Jonathan Boucher—Tory Priest: Character. A View of the Causes and Consequences of the American Revolution . Influence of Filmer's Patriarcha . Doctrine of obedience. Evil effects of republicanism. Government a divine institution—the patriarchal nature of kingship. An extreme Tory	214
III.	JOHN DICKINSON—THE MIND OF THE AMERICAN WHIG—A moderate—spokesman of the colonial Whigs. Essence of Whiggery—the rule of property. His social position; conception of political stewardship. A constitutional lawyer. Accepted parliamentary sovereignty, right to regulate trade. Taxation and Whiggery—a tax and an imposition. Not a republican. His Two Letters on the Tea Tax . In the Constitutional Convention. Letters of Fabius . His views old-fashioned	219

IV. SAMUEL ADAMS—THE MIND OF THE AMERICAN DEMOCRAT	PAGE
—An agitator and practical politician. Member of the opposition. Advocate of home rule. Understood the ways of Tory government. Master of political theory. Three lines of argument: natural rights, constitutional rights, the charter compact. Influence of Locke, of Coke. Reliance on public opinion. Use of publicity, organization, town meetings. Newspaper articles. Motive of attacks on royal officials. Faith in the people. A democrat. The cost in reputation . . .	233
V. LITERARY ECHOES
I. The Whig Satirists
1. John Trumbull: A lover of belles lettres drawn into the strife. M'Fingal . The note of humor. A potential intellectual; a moderate liberal. An echo of Connecticut opinion . . .	248
2. Francis Hopkinson, Esq.: The state of Philadelphia culture. A dilettante. A potential Tory turned Whig. The New Roof; Objections to the Proposed Plan of a Federal Government . A Federalist . . .	252
II. The Tory Satirists
1. Jonathan Odell: A bitter nature. His satires—an embodiment of class prejudice. The American Times . Estimate of Whig leaders . . .	255
2. Samuel Peters: His curious ambition. His History of Connecticut . Explanation of the cause of the Revolution—ministerial neglect. The cure—establishment of a colonial aristocracy . . .	259

BOOK III: LIBERALISM AND THE CONSTITUTION

PART I

The Agrarian Defeat—1783—1787

I. AGRARIANISM AND CAPITALISM
I. Background of Ideas—English and French contributions. The struggle between political realists and humanitarian liberals. Influence of English middle class. Puritan ethics of work and capitalism. Attitude towards current liberalisms—the state. Influence of Harrington, Locke, Adam Smith. The new individualism. Rousseau and French humanitarianism—decentralization and the paternalistic state. Reasons why English influence prevailed . . .	267
II. The Political Situation: Party alignments. Weakness of agrarians. The composite group of Federalists. Odium attaching to democracy—confused with Popu-

CONTENTS

xxix

	PAGE
lism. Shays's Rebellion. Reaction from natural rights to economic realism. The return to seventeenth-century republicanism	273
II. THE GREAT DEBATE—Inadequate theory of republicanism. Earlier English liberalism undemocratic. Democratic theory undeveloped. First debate: republicanism and the majority rule—Madison's view; the Whig doctrine of property rule. Second debate: opposition to checks on majority will. The Federalist —its repute, the augmented state, theory of faction, economic basis of government. Letters of R. H. Lee—analysis of economic conditions, the Constitution undemocratic. Emergence of parties	279
III. POLITICAL THINKERS—THE ENGLISH GROUP
I. Alexander Hamilton—The Leviathan State: Representative of conservative interests. A master of finance, administrator rather than thinker. Inadequate intellectual equipment. A political realist: men are swayed by self-interest; the rule of the strong. Undemocratic. The doctrine of vox justitiae . His plan of government—the fallacy of his argument. As a statesman: necessity of allying the wealthy with government: position on funding, taxation, the tariff, the industrial revolution. Statesman of the rising capitalism	292
II. John Adams—Realist: Compared with Dr. Johnson—apostle of common sense. Shift from earlier position. Intellectual qualities. His early constitutionalism—a federated British empire. A Defense of the Constitution of Government , and Discourses on Davila . Opposition aroused by latter. His political philosophy: theory of human nature, doctrine of rivalry, the class struggle, natural aristocracy. Foolishness of French doctrines of equality and fraternity. Faction the weakness of democracy—the end anarchy or absolutism. The fact of property rule. Hence need for system of checks and balances. Sources of his philosophy—Harrington. Hostility to Hamilton. A notable political thinker . . .	307

PART II

Political Democracy Gets under Way—1787-1800

I. THE IMPACT OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION—Stirred party passions afresh. Popularized democracy in America and provided a body of philosophy: doctrines of the majority will, expediency, local self-government. Later party divisions. Democratic clubs. The odium theologicum .
--	--

	PAGE
Paine's Rights of Man and J. Q. Adams's Publicola . The shift of positions	321
II. POLITICAL THINKERS—THE FRENCH GROUP
I. Tom Paine—Republican Pamphleteer: An internationalist. Odium attaching to his name. A social inefficient. Common Sense —appeal to expediency; attack on monarchy and the British Constitution. Political philosophy: doctrine of continuous compact, of the res publica . The Rights of Man —a reply to Burke's theory of civil contract and the expediency of aristocratic rule. The business of the revolution. Agrarian Justice : civilization and poverty; relation to Babeuf; theory of unearned increment; a tax proposal. Decline and Fall of the English System of Finance —an attack on funding. A pacifist. Sources of his philosophy. His position in contemporary American opinion	327
II. Thomas Jefferson—Agrarian Democrat: Position. His inconsistencies due to a slowly clarifying philosophy. An intellectual, holding to American experience. Chief doctrines: the social compact, the res publica , the diminished state—a philosophy of decentralization. Belief in the excellence of an agrarian economy—a Physiocrat; fear of cities and industrialism. Suspicious of appeal to past experience: the evils of the past due to leviathan state; consolidation would repeat those evils in America. Excellence of home rule; the majority will. Fear of judicial encroachment, the Common Law. Class rule serves class interests. Faith in the common people. The industrial revolution and a new centralization . . .	342
III. THE WAR OF BELLES LETTRES
I. The Federalist Group	357
1. The Hartford Wits: Arch conservatives. Sources of Connecticut Federalism—Calvinism and business. The Connecticut fear of democracy. Members of the group. Theodore Dwight. Timothy Dwight—his contemporary reputation, likeness to Increase Mather, a clerical Federalist. His literary work	357
2. The Anarchiad : Political writings of the Wits. Character of Lemuel Hopkins. The theme of the work—an attack on populism and democracy . . .	363
II. The French Group	367
1. Philip Freneau—Poet of Two Revolutions: A revolutionary volunteer—effect on his reputation. A radical advocate of all liberal movements. Effect on his poetic career. Spirit of his satire—attack on

CONTENTS

xxx1

PAGE

England. His desire to strip colonial loyalties from the American. Influence on Freneau of the French Revolution. The National Gazette —a leader of anti-Federalism. The consequences. His growing reputation	368
2. Joel Barlow—Jacobin: Early career: his experience abroad and his adoption of Jacobin views. Cost to his reputation. Advice to the Privileged Orders : the doctrine of res publica ; social responsibility for the individual. Letter to the National Convention of France , and the machinery of a democratic state. The Columbiad —a republican poem	382
3. Hugh Henry Brackenridge—Free-Lance Democrat: An independent critic of the shortcomings of democracy. Modern Chivalry —a frontier book, a satire of current manners. Democracy must not be sacrificed to selfish individualism—the folly of the political climber and of the electorate. A notable book	390
CONCLUSION	397
BIBLIOGRAPHY	399
INDEX	405